The May Reduction Sale Won't Last Much Longer-Buy Now!

A great many have taken advantage of this MONEY SAVING SALE, both customers and others, but what gives us the greatest pleasure is the comments on our method of doing business. Several of our regular customers said they were always ready to believe the bargains and prices were just as advertised and always took advantage of them.

Don't Miss This Sale SALE NOW ON Don't Miss This Sale

AT THE PRICES QUOTED IT WILL PAY YOU TO BUY ENOUGH TO LAST AN ENTIRE YEAR

Our Premium Department is the Talk Wherever You Go!

Trading at SCHMITT & STEINHARDT'S enables you to share in the profits to the extent of 5 per cent and it's all so simple, too all you need to do is to collect our Premium Tickets given free on Dry Goods and Furnishings and exchange them for useful and ornamental articles in our Premium Department. This feature of our business is FREE TO EVERYBODY without exception. Don't fail to ask for tickets.

This page of special May offerings fully exemplifies this store's value-giving supremacy. From top to bottom this big store is filled with values that no other store can match. Not that we buy our goods for less than all stores do—we don't claim that, though we own our merchandise at as low a figure as any house in Texas - but we're satisfied with less. We mark our goods regularly at a LOWER margin of profit. We KNOW this and YOU know it, too, if you are a customer of this store. Many of these regular low prices are lowered again for the MAY SALE. They are in nearly every department.

JOHN ANDERSON, MY JO.

John Anderson, my Jo, John, When we were first acqueint Your locks were like the raven. Your bonnie brow was brent. But now your brow is bald. John, Your locks are like the snow; But blessings on your frosty pow, John Anderson, my Jo!

John Anderson, my Jo. John, We clamb the hill thegither, And mony a canty day, John, We've had wi' ane anither. Now we maun totter down, John, But hand in hand we'll go And sleep thegither at the foot, John Anderson, my Jo. -Robert Burns

To make the most of dull hours, to make the most of dull people, to like a poor jest better than none, to wear the threadbare coat like a gentleman, to be out-voted with a smile, to hitch your wagon to the old horse if no star is handy-that is wholesome philosophy .-- Bliss Perry.

MORRIS is our Sheppard, we shall not want for a leader of the embattled ranks of the drys! He will make us happy with honeyed phrases and we shall not want for beautiful perorations. But when it comes to copping the votes all is vanity and vexation of spirit for, verily, Jake will be there with the goods! Selah! - Hondo Anvil Herald. Yes, Jake has been caught with the goods on, and for that reason the Sheppard will drive him out. -Beeville Picayune, Seeing Jake has the votes, his only chance is by using the weapon Samson used on the Philistines. Shep may have the weapon but Jake is no Philistine.

We are profoundly sorry for our friend Getzendaner the Uvlade Leader-News. The Southwest Texas Press Association elected him President of the Association and he will have to hold the convention in Ft. Stockton next year. Ft. Stockton is a iong ways and the walking is not good in those parts. - Hondo Anvil Herald. Thanks for your sympathy, but we think the trip and the meeting will be worth the difficulties. We shall be disappointed if they both be not made even more pleasant by the company of Fletcher Davis of the Hondo Anvil Herald.-Uvalde Leader-News. After that it would seem to be up to us to arrange for the walk or maliciously spoil Getzendaner's pleasure. Question of the hour-any one got a pair of old shoes to trade or subscription?

Ir Saturday's primary taught any lesson at all to the anti-prohibitionists of Texas it should be he folly and danger of indifference and division. The support of Woodrow Wilson was centralzed upon him for the simple reaon that he is a prohibitionist. On the other hand, the opposition to Wilson was either indifferent or scattered its forces upon several other candidates with the result that it will turn up impotent in the State Convention. A similar mistake in the July primary and Texas will be a dry state in another twelve months. What say you?-Hondo Anvil Herald. Don't be pessimistic. Wilson is not a pro, and neither is Harmon, Clark or Underwood, the other Democratic candidates, True, we antis were indifferent, because we were perfectly willing for our prohibition friends in Texas to have their choice of the four anti-prohibitionists who are candidates. Our day is coming July 27th. Then, we will be at the polls.- Lockhart Register. We are not pessimistic; we were just stating the situation as it is And as for Wilson not being a prohibitionist, all we have to say is that if he is not he succeeded in gold-bricking one of the smoothest bunches that ever figured in Texas politics - the embattled pros!

Saloon Man Exonerated.

Austin Tex., May 15.-The comptroller today declined to forfeit the liquor dealers' license of Louis Carle, a sloonkeeper of D'Hanis, Medina county, after the comptroller had investigated the testimony adduced on a complaint against Carle. He was charged with having sold liquor to minors, but this was not sustained and he was exonerated.

Biliousness and Constipation.

For years I was troubled with billious ness and constipation, which made life miserable for me. My appetite failed me. I lost my usual force and vitality. Pepsin preparations and cathartics only made matters worse. I do not know where I should have been today had I not tried Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. The Tablets relieve the ill feeling at once, strengthen the digestive functions, purify the stomach, liver and blood, helping the system to do its work naturally. - Mrs. Rosa Potts, Birmingham, Ala. These tablets are for sale by all dealers.

"Nails'

"Nails are a mighty good thing-particularly finger nails---but I don't believe they were intended solely for scratching, though I used mine largely for that purpose for several years. I was sorely afflicted, and had it to do. One application of Hunt's Cure, however, relieved my itch, and less than one box cured me entirely." J. M. Ward, Index, Texas.

J. M. Howell, a ropular druggist of Greensburg, Ky., says, "We use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in our own household and know it is excellent." For sale by all dealers.

Is there anything in all this world that is of more importance to you than good digestion? Food must be eaten to sustain life and must be digested and converted into blood. When the digestion fails the whole body suffers. Chamberlain's Tablets are a rational and reliable cure for indigestion. They increase the flow of bile, purify the blood, strengthen the stomach, and tone up the whole digestive apparatus to a natural and healty action. For sale by all dealers.

Not Sisters

Now and again you see two women passing down the street who look like sisters. You are astonished to learn that they are

You are astonished to learn that they are mother and daughter, and you realize that a woman at forty or forty-five ought to be at her finest and fairest. Why isn't it so? The general health of woman is so intimately associated with the local health of the essentially feminine organs that there can be no red cheeks and round form where there is female weakness.

Women who have suffered from this trouble have found prompt relief and cure in the use of Dr.

Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It gives vigor and vitality to the organs of womanhood. It clears the complexion, brightens the eyes, and redders the cheeks.

No alcohol, or habit-forming drugs is contained in "Favorite Prescription."

Any sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. Every letter is held as sacredly confidential, and answered in a plain envelope. Address: World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R.V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N.Y.

William C. Hamer, a contractor, was killed and Mrs. Zara Martin was painfully wounded in the left arm as the result of a duel fought at 10 o'clock last night seven miles south of the Medina dam site between Hamer and Phil Farrel, the latter a foreman employed by Hamer on the construction of the west canal leading from the main dam. Ten shots were fired, Hamer emptying a revolver while Farrel operated an automatic shotgun loaded with buckshot, Contractor Killed.

Hamer was engaged in a conversation with Mrs. Martin when Farrel is said to have approached and the shooting began, several persons witnessing the exchange of shots. Mrs. Martin was struck immediately after the shooting began, a buckshot passing through the arm near the elbow. Hamer fell mortally wounded, expiring at 2:45 o'clock this morning.

Farrel disappeared immediately after the shooting, according to Claude Gilliam, a constable of Medina county, who brought the body of Mr. Hamer to San Antonio today. Hamer was 34 years old, single, and a native of Alabama. The body is being held at the Riebe Undertaking company pending the arrival of a sister from New Mexico. The remains, accompanied by the father, F. H. Hamer, and the sister, will be taken to Dardanelle, Ark., for

CHAPTER XVII.

The Face in the Locket.

Left alone in the room she sat down again before the fire and drew from her pocket the packet of letters. She knew them by heart, she had read and reread them often when she had been sione. They had stascinated her. They were letters from some other map to this man's wife. They were sizzed by an initial only and the identity of the writer was quite unknown to her. The woman's replies were not with the others, but it was easy grough to see what those replies had been. All the passion of which the woman had been capable had evidently been bestowed upon the writer of the letters she had treasured. Her story was quite plain. She and married Newbold in a fit of pique. He was an eastern man, the best educated, the most fascinating and interesting of the men who frequented the camp. There had been a carrel between the letter writer and the woman; there were always quarrels, apparently, but this had been a serious one and the man had savagely fung away and left her. He had not come back as he usually did. She had waited for him and then he had come back-too late!

He had wanted to kill the other, but she had prevented, and while Newbold was away he had made desperate love to her. He had besought her to leave her husband to go away with him. He had used every argument that he could to that end and the woman had hesitated and wavered, but she had not consented; she had not denied her love for him any more than she had denied her respect and a certain admiration for her gallant, trusting husband. She had refused again and again the requests of her lover. She could not control her heart nevertheless she had kept to her marriage vows. But the force of her resistance had grown weaker and she had realized that alone she would perhaps inevitably succumb.

Her lover had been away when her hurband returned prior to the last fateful journey. Enid Maitland saw now why she had besought him to take her with him, she was afraid to be left alone! She did not dare depend upon her own powers any more; her only salvation was to go with this man whom she did not love, whom at times she almost hated, to keep from falling into the arms of the man she did love. She had been more or less afraid of Newbold. She had soon realized, because she was not blinded by any passion as he, that they had been utterly mismated. She had come to understand that when the same knowledge of the truth came to him, as it inevitably must some day, nothing but unhappiness would be their

Every kind of an argument in addition to those so passionately adduced in these letters urging her to break away from her husband and to seek happiness for herself while yet there was time, besieged her heart, seconded her lover's plea and assailed her will, and yet she had not given

Now Enid Maitland hated the woman who had enjoyed the first young love of the man she herself loved. She hated her because of her priority of possession, because her memory yet came between her and that man. She hated her because Newbold was still true to her memory, because Newbold, believing in the greatness of her passion for him, thought it shame and dishonor to his manhood to be false to her, no matter what love and longing drew him on.

Yet there was a stern sense of justice in the bosom of this young woman. She exulted in the successful battle the poor woman had made for the preservation of her honor and her good name, against such odds. It was a sex triumph for which she was glad. She was proud of her for the stern rigor with which she had refused to take the easiest way and the desperation with which she had clung to him she did not love, but to whom she was bound by the laws of God and man, in order that she might not fall into the arms of the man she did love, in defiance of right.

Enid Maitland and this woman were as far removed from each other as the opposite poles of "e earth, but there was yet a common quality in each one of virtuous womanhood, of lofty morality. Natural, perhaps in the one and to be be expected; unnatural, perhaps, and to be unexpected in the other, but there! Now that she knew what love was and what its power and what its force-for althat she had felt and experienced and dreamed about before were as nothing to what it was since he had spokenshe could understand what the strug gle must have been in that woman' heart. She could honor her, reverence her, pity her.

See could understand the feeling of the man teo; she could think much more clearly than he. He was distracted by two passions, for his pride and his honor and for her; she had as yet but one, for him. And as there was less turmoil and confusion in her mind, she was better capable of looking the facts in the face and making the right deduction from them.

She could understand how in the first frightful rush of his grief and remorse and love the very fact that Newbold had been compelled to kill his wife, of whom he was beginning to grow a little weary under such circumstances, had added immensely to his remorse and quickened his determination to explate his guilt and cherish her memory. She could understand why he would do just as he had done, go into the wilderness to be alone in horror of himself and in horror of his fellow men to think only, mistakenly, of her.

Now he was paying the penalty of that isolation. Men were made to live with one another, and no one could violate the law natural, or by so long an inheritance as to have so become, without paying that penalty. His ideas of loyalty and fidelity were warped, his conceptions of his duty were narrow. There was something noble in his determination, it is true, but there was something also very foolish. The dividing line between wisdom and folly is sometimes as indefinite as that between comedy and tragedy, between laughter and tears. If the woman he had married and killed had only bated him and he had known it would have been different, but since he believed so in her love he could do nothing

At that period in her reflections Enid Maitland saw a great light. The woman had not loved her husband after all, she had loved another. That passion of which he had dreamed had not been for him. By a strange chain of circumstances Enid Maitland held in her hand the solvtion of the problem. She had but to give him these letters to show him that his golden image had stood upon feet of clay, that the love upon which he had dwelt was not his. Once convinced of that he would come quick to her arms. She cried a prayer of blessing on old Kirkby and started to her feet, the letters in hand, to call Newbold back to her and tell him, and then she stopped.

Woman as she was she had respect for the binding conditions and laws of honor as well as he. Chance, nay Providence, had put the honor of this woman, her rival, in her hands. The world had long since forgotten this poor unfortunate; in no heart was her memory cherished save in that of her husband. His idea of her was a false one to be sure, but not even to procure her own happiness could Enid Maitland overthrow that ideal, shatter that

She sat down again with the letters in her hand. It had been very simple a moment since, but it was not so now. She had but to show him those letters to remove the great barrier between them. She could not do it. It was clearly impossible. The reputation of her dead sister who had struggled so bravely to the end was in her hands, she could not sacrifice her even for her own happi-

"Quixotic," you say? I do not think so. She had blundered unwittingly, unwillingly, upon the heart secret of he other woman; she could not betray it. Even if the other woman had been really unfaithful in deed at well as in thought to her husband

She Had but to Show Him Those Letters.

Enid could hardly have destroyed his recollection of her. How much more impossible it was since the other woman had fought so heroically and so successfully for her honor. Womanhood demanded her stience. Loyalty, honor, compelled her silence.

A dead hand grasped his heart and the same dead hand grasped hers. She could see no way out of the difficulty. So far as she knew no human soul except old Kirkby and herself knew this woman's story. She could not tell Newbold and she would have to impose upon Kirkby the same silence as she herself exercised. There was absolutely no way in which the man could find out. He must cherish his dream as he would. She would not enlighten him, she would not disabuse his mind, she could not shatter his ideal, she could not betray his wife. They might love as the angels of heaven and yet be kept forever apart-by a serupie, an idea, a principle, an abstraction, honor, a name.

Her mind told her these things were idle and foolish, but her soul would not hear of it. And in spite of her resolutions she felt that eventually there would be some way. She would not have been a human woman if she had not hoped and prayed that. She believed that God had created them for each other, that he had thrown them together. She was enough of a fatalist in this instance at least to accept their intimacy as the result of His ordination. There must be some way out of the dilem-

Yet she knew that he would be true to his belief and she felt that she would not be false to her obligation. What of that? There would be some way. Perhaps somebody else knew, and then there flashed into her mind the writer of the let-Who was he? Was he yet alive? Had he any part to play in this strange tragedy aside from that he had already assayed?

Sometimes an answer to a secret query is made openly. At this juncture Newbold came back. He stopped before her unsteadily, his face now marked not only by the flerceness of the storm outside, but by the flercer grapple of the storm in

"You have a right," he began, "to know everything now. I can withhold nothing from you."

He had in his hand a picture and something yellow that gleamed in the light. "There," he continued extending them toward her, "is the picture of the poor woman who loved me and whom I killed, you saw it once before."

"Yes," she nodded, taking it from him carefully and looking again in a strange commixture of pride, resentment and pity at the bold, somewhat coarse, entirely uncultured, yet handsome face which gave no evidence of the moral purpose which sle had displayed.

"And here," said the man offering the other article, "is something that no human eye but mine has ever seen since that day. It is a locket I took from her neck. Until you came I wore it next to my heart." "And since then?"

"Since then I have been unworthy her as I am unworthy you, and I have put it aside."

"Does it contain another picture?" "Yes." "Of her?"

"A man's face." "Yours?"

He shook his head.

"Look and see," he answered. Press the spring."

Suiting action to word, the next second Enid Maitland found herself gazing upon the pictured semblance of Mr. James Armstrong! She was utterly unable to suppress an exclamation and a start of surprise at the astonishing revelation. The man looked at her curiously; he opened his mouth to question her but she recovered herself in part at least and the trails, you shall be restored to swiftly interrupted him in a panic your people, to your world of terror lest she should betray her knowledge

"And what is the picture of another man doing in your wife's locket?" she asked to gain time, for she very well knew the reply; knew it, indeed, better than Newbold himself! Who as it happened, was equally in the dark both as to the man and the

"I don't know," answered the oth-

"Do you know this man?" "I never saw him in my life that I can recall." "And have you-did you-"

"Did I suspect my wife?" he asked. "Never. I had too many evidences that she loved me and me alone for a ghost of suspicion to enter my mind. It may have been a brother, or her father in his youth."

"And why did you wear it?" "Because I took it from her dead heart. Some day I shall find out who the man is and when I shall I know there will be nothing to her discredit in the knowledge."

Enid Maitland nodded her head. She closed the locket, laid it on the table and pushed it away from her. So this was the man the woman had loved, who had begged her to go away with him, this handsome Armstrong who had come within an ace of winning her own affection, to whom she was in some measure what is it? Pride, what is it? Self-

How strangely does fate work out its purposes. Enid had come from the Atlantic seaboard to be the second woman that both these two men loved! If she ever saw Mr. James Arm strong again, and she had no doubt that she would, she would have some strange things to say to him. She held in her hands now all the threads of the mystery, she was master of all the solutions, and each thread was a chain that bound her.

"My friend," she said at last with a deep sigh, "you must forget this night and go on as before. You love me, thank God for that, but bonor and respect interpose between us. And I love you, and I thank God for that, too, but for me as well the same barrier rises. Whether shall ever surmount these barriers God alone knows. He brought us together, he put that love in our hearts, we will have to leave it to him to do as he will with us both. Meanwhile we must go on as

"No," cried the man, "you impose upon me tasks beyond my strength; you don't know what love is, you don't know the heart hunger, the awalone with a recollection for all these years, a man in the dark, in the night; and the light comes, you are here. The first night I brought you here I walked that room on the other side of pound of medicine.

that narrow door like a lion pent up in bars of steel. I had only my own love, my own passionate adoration to move me then, but now that I know you love me, that I see it in your eyes. that I hear it from your lips, that I mark it in the beat of your heart, can I keep slient? Can I live on and on? Can I see you, touch you, breathe the same air with you, be pent up in the same room with you hour after hour. day after day, and go on as before? I can't do it, it is an impossibility. What keeps me now from taking you in my arms and from kissing the color into your cheeks, from making your lips my own, from drinking the light from your eyes?" He swayed near to her, his voice rose, "What restrains me?" he demanded.

"Nothing," said the woman, never shrinking back an inch, facing him with all the courage and daring with which a Goddess might look upon a man. "Nothing but my weakness and your strength.

"Yes, that's it, but do not count too much upon the one or the other. Great Ged, how can I keep away from you; life on the old terms is insupportable. I must go." "And where?"

"Anywhere, so it be away." "And when?"

"It would be death in the snow and in the mountains, tonight. No. no. you cannot go."

"Well, tomorrow then, it will be fair, I can't take you with me, but I must go alone to the settlements, I must tell your friends you are here, alive, well. I shall find men to come back and get you. What I cannot do alone numbers together may effect. They can carry you over the worst of can forget me."

"And do you think," asked the woman, "that I could ever forget you?" "I don't know."

"And will you forget me?" "Not so long as life throbe in my veins, and beyond."

"And I too," was the return. "So be it. You won't be afraid to stay here alone, now." "No, not since you love me," was the noble answer. "I suppose I must; there is no other way, we could not go on as before. And you will come back to me as quickly as you can with the others?" "I shall not come back; I will give woman in quick desperation, "if you do not come back they shall have nothing to carry from here but my dead body. You do not alone know what love is," she cried resolutely, "and I will not let you go unless I have your word to return." "And how will you prevent my go-

"I can't. But I will fellow you on my hands and knees in the snow until I freeze and die unless I have your promise.

"You have beaten me," said the man hopelessly. "You always do. Honor, respect, what is it? Say the word and I am at your feet, I put the past behind me.

"I don't say the word," answered the woman bravely, white facet, pale lipped, but resolute. "To be yours, to have you mine, in the greatest desire of my heart, but not in the coward's way, not at the expense of honor, of self-respect—no not that way. Cour age, my friend, God will show us the way, and meantime good night."

"I shall start in the morning." "Yes," she nodded rejuctantly but knowing it had to be, "but you won't go without bidding me good bye." "No."

Good night then," she said extending her hand."

"Good night," he whispesed hoars ley and refused it, backing away. "I don't dare to take it. I don't dare to touch you again. I love you so, my only salvation is to keep away."

"If Governor Harmon were running for governor of Ohio today he would get the biggest vote in the country districts that any candidate for that office has ever received. The 1 per cent tax has done it. Farmers and home owners for years have felt that it was a hardship to pay their taxes and have clamored for relief. The Republican party answered them by Loasting of their monopoly of busiress administrations and letting the taxes crawl higher and higher. Governer Harmon came into office with an idea that it was time to do something for the farmer, and his adminestration has been occupied largely with legislation and administration in their interest. Never has agriculture been given such an impetus nor agricultural education been made so accessible and dignified. Then, reducing the tax on farms and putting it on corporations and personals was the stroke that made Harmon solid with the farmers. THE CHAEL Angelo made the canvass glow with life and Phidias made marble speak and throughout ages civilization has felt the elevating influence of the painter and the sculptor. Their success was due to the fact that they had the ability to put the stuff in their work and what is true in art, is also true in government. We need in our Legislature men who can put the stuff on our statute books that will make industry glow with life and the soil speak with a glorious harvest.

To meet the issues of civilization now confronting us, we must place in position of power men who can chisel out empires and draw the tendrils of civilization Texasward. We must have statesmen who can pour wisdom into the fountain head of prosperity and who can wave the magic wand of genius over a land as full of opportunities as the morning of creation. Texas needs great men.
